

WINCHELSEA VETERINARY SERVICES

Providing prompt, reliable and mobile veterinary service to your home and farm

Dr Tyler Stitt grew up in Nanaimo, where he and his sister learned to ride under the instruction of Jennifer Payne at Pyramid Stables. He was first exposed to equine veterinary medicine while riding shotgun as a high-school student with Dr Bettina Bobsien. After 10 years of university education on two continents, he returned to Nanaimo in 2008 with his family. Dr Stitt first practiced equine and companion animal medicine at Petroglyph Animal Hospital in 2008 and 2009, then joined Coombs Veterinary Hospital before venturing out on his own in 2011. Since graduation in 2008, Dr Stitt has divided his time and energy between veterinary clinical practice and research in human-animal population health issues at the Centre for Coastal Health.

Next to family and photography, equestrian pursuits (professional and recreational) remain Dr Stitt's first love.

Because of his rather hectic family schedule, Dr Stitt's availability for regular booked appointments varies considerably from one week to another. Go online to www.winchelsea vetservices.ca to view his availability for regular appointments for the current month and for one month in advance. Call 250-667-5534 directly to enquire about emergency service.

Veterinary Public Health & Medical Illustrations

Veterinary medicine is a unique profession, in that a veterinarian can work in any number of fields including, but not limited to, academia, research, clinical, pharmaceutical, government, international development and public health. Within these fields, veterinarians work with people, pets, domestic livestock, wildlife, fish and marine mammals, and the environment. The Centre for Coastal Health (CCH), where Dr Stitt works part of his time, is a non-profit research group made up of veterinarians and biologists who study health at the interface between humans, animals and the environment. Visit www.centreforcoastalhealth.ca to learn more about the research that Dr Stitt is involved in.
